LETTER FROM ASHEVILLE.

B. A. Newland, district possenger agent TRAITS OF OUR PEOPLE AS SEEN BY A LADY.

> Usages of Speech, and a Pleasant Tribute to the Courtesy of the Southern Men, and to General Hospitality,

In the Springfield Republican of Novem ber 29th, we had a very pleasantly writen letter from a lady, now a resident, but a native of Massachusetts, and brought up with Yankee habits and quintons, and with a very independent way of acting and speaking out both. she is Mrs. Vame Noble Baldwin, a very cute and just observer, and a very right and entertaining writer. We use so much of the letter as we find space for:

But what of the people? Asheville has wo quite distinct classes-the permanat residents, mostly enterprising pro-assional and business men and their families, who have come here from other ctions, attracted by the rapid growth easure, a large number of them wealthy puests at the Baltery Park hotel, and easily distinguishable from the first by their dolor-for-mente air, as they roll by very evening with handsomely livered urn-outs on the tayorite drive toward he beautiful French Broad river. In the ast seatence I found myself writing evening" like a veritable Tar-heel when ought, rather, as a good Yankee, to ave soid morning, or even to have seil that awkward make-shift of our nguage, "afternoon," If I may be surdened to a bit of personal reminisence, I will say that when I first came south I do expect to find the negro me what deferent from the Cancasian out was not quite prepared for the differ-nce, especially in speech and opinion. which exists between the representatives d my own race in the two sections. In the South, a I would case my lot with the majority of the good and wise, behold. I must imor the good and wise, behalf I must me or need a democrat. In the North, when in the city, I had been in the balit of saying "good morning" antil a late dinner, and "good evening" from that time onward. In the country, had carefully remembered to say, "good morning" only until noon, "good after-noon" from noon till dark, and "good yening" when "the glowing orb of day had dismensited from his fiery steed be-low the Hesperian sky," to quote the slightly mixed metaphor of an orator whom I have somewhere heard. But here "evening begins at noon," if one would be intelligile to his fellow creatures, and your unhappy correspondent became artangled in several embarrassing mistakes through ignorance of this.

There is one habit of speech which, nore than any other, marks the souther ier, and especially the North Carolinian ner, and especially the North Carolinian—the almost universal use of the word—like" for "as it." as in the sentence, "It looks like it might rain." In striking contrast to this use of "like," which is really an error, though used by English authors, we have noticed everywhere the admirable promunciation of the letter "n," so rarely met with in the North except among the cultivated classes. We have been tempted to paraphrase Admirable promoted to paraphrase Adhave been tempted to paraphrase Ad-dison's bor mot and exclaim, "Why, in the South even the little children speak English" when we have honed English!" when we have heard young children, and the least as well as the best educated of the people, pronounce this letter with a grace and correctness that have brought the blush of shame to our Yankee cheeks.
